
QUESTIONS?

What is “Testing Out”? Testing-out is passing a high school course final exam or equivalent with a minimum grade of C+ (77%).

What happens when a student “tests out” of a class? Students receive credit and they will receive a T.O. (tested out) on their transcript. The T.O. does not calculate into the student’s grade point average.

Is there a limit to the number of test-out exams students may take? No. A student may attempt to test-out of all the credit areas required for graduation in the Merit Curriculum. This does not include the local requirements for graduation.

Can the school district deny credit to a student who is enrolled in a course and has not met the district attendance policy? Yes. However, a student who fails to earn credit for not meeting attendance policy may still request to test-out of a subject regardless of the amount of class time or attendance. The opportunity to do so, however, is limited by the testing-out timelines.

Will testing-out allow a student to graduate early? Students must still follow the early graduation policy described in the Student Handbook even if all graduation requirements have been met.

Can students test-out of any of the new credit areas required for graduation?

Yes, students can test-out of any of the credit areas required for graduation and it is not limited to specific credit areas.

Can students get tutoring or materials to prepare for testing out? Teachers are not required to tutor or prepare students for testing out. There are a limited number of text books available for the students to check out of the counseling office.
